ITALIAN SERIOUSLY

STABBED AT NIANTIC. Knife, Plunged Into Back, Entered Lung of Charlie Murphy.

Charlie Murphy, an Italian, with Joseph Qualino and Ferrino Joseph, were at the breakfast table about 6.30 his counsel, Thomas Seymour. The o'clock Friday morning, at Niantic, and letters show that Willmot was interested in the counsel of the cou o'clock Friday morning, at Niantic, and for some reason known only to himself Qualino put his teaspoon in Murphy's cup. "Why did you do that?" asked Murphy of Qualino. Without designing a reply Qualino seized the handle of a pickaxe nearby and struck Murphy over the head, inflicting an ugly wound. The blow stunned Murphy and nearly felled him to the floer.

Joseph, the second assailant, who up to this point had not entered into the quarrel, grasped a butcher knife from the breakfast table and before Murphy could defend himself plunged it into his back. Murphy sank to the floor in a heap and realizing the seriousness of the crime both Qualino and Joseph to the slave of Joseph Towers of New London. An examination revenled the fact that the wound in the back was an ugly one and that it had puncutured the lung, from which blood was pouring profusely. The doctor stanched the flow of blood and treated the wounds.

The victim is considered by Dr. Dart to be in a serious condition, and grave doubts are expressed of his recovery.

The direct cause of the quarrel is not known. All three men are employed in a section ganf of the New Haven road, and have lived in the same house for some time. The Woodbridge Transactions.

The Rev. Timothy Woodbridge of Simsbury, who became a prominent Congregationalist clergyman in his time, received a bill of sale of a negro, Feb. 5, 1725, from John Jacob Luttreth. In December, 1742, Benjamin Arnold of Middletown bought at auction for 55 pounds a negro woman, Pegg, belonging to Theopholus Woodbridge of Simsbury. She was of demented and disgusting habits. She died in March, 1744. She had been owned in Norwich. When John Hutchins bought her of John Crocker she was worthless and beastly, and he returned her. When Woodbridge bought her he told him he would swap her for a dead negro.
